Poggio Imperiale is an Apulian village, located in the province of Foggia, with approximately 2900 inhabitants. It presents itself as an artistic, historical and seaside centre. It is the northern gate of the Gargano National Park.

The origin and name of this town is identified with a prince, Placido Imperiale. While the term "Imperial" is obviously connected to the history of the House, "Poggio" refers to the physical location of the municipality, which is located on a hill from where you can admire the nearby Lesina lake and the valley below .
